

NAB will not presume to say what radio stations/channels/selections will be available to me.

XM is a sorely needed alternative to the incessant commercialized radio fare we have been subjected to for entirely too long.

If I am inclined to pay exclusively for virtually unlimited music, traffic advisories and weather info, then NAB must stay out of my life.

I continue to listen to all radio, even though I prefer XM. Endless music endlessly soothes the breast in me.

Suggest NAB's energies be spent on elevating the quality of XM's competitors, rather than looking for protection from fair and open competition.

When something better comes along, embrace it. It's called evolution.
